

Welcome to Read-Write-Reason™

NoRedInk's integrated reading and writing offering equips educators to apply best practices in literacy instruction, develop students' critical thinking skills, and transform students' relationship with reading and writing.

Guide critical thinking by scaffolding the most important higher-order skills across reading and writing

Develop students' ability to think deeply with engaging, expertly sequenced activities that integrate reading and writing instruction.

Foster students' agency and identity as writers

Build student agency through frequent choice, personalized texts, creation-oriented exercises, and embedded self-reflection routines.

Access dynamic data on student growth

Track skill improvement and students' perceptions of their own learning across schools, grades, and subgroups to drive instructional shifts sooner.

The screenshot displays the NoRedInk Read-Write-Reason interface. On the left, a menu titled "What do you want to read and write about today?" offers four categories: Movies, Music, Sports, and Video games. The main area features a large image of a cluttered room with a desk, chair, and various items. A prompt asks, "What kind of person lives in this room?" and provides a list of clues to identify the person. The clues are: 1. The bed is really young, or just very small. 2. Big stack of books on desk he likes to read, or has lots of how. 3. Cute Stuffed animal probably a young kid. 4. Five cups of hot cocoa on the desk. has an intense personality? Each clue has a green checkmark next to it. Below the clues, it says "You found 4 clues" and "I'm ready to write". To the right, there's a section titled "What did today's activity help you learn or think about?" with a text box for reflection. Below that, a prompt asks, "Is football more about precision or power?" and provides a paragraph of text with highlighted words. The text is: "The quarterback reads the defense and quickly changes the play. When the receiver hears the word 'Hut!' he launches, sprints to a quick slant, a burst of speed against the defender grasping air. As the ball soars through the air, different moves meet their target. The receiver extends, greets the football with the tips of his ...". Below the text, there's a scale from "Precision" to "Power" with a slider and a football icon.

Join the movement to transform writing instruction.

Reach out to your NoRedInk representative to see how Read-Write-Reason™ can drive measurable growth in your district.